Graphene was part of the first Human Genome Project initiated in 2001 [Craig Venter]. mRNA gene therapy Nanotech using Graphene Oxide as a vector, runs on CRISPR technology and it was developed by Pfizer, Moderna, and BioNTech, as a treatment for sick cancer patients. Due to its cytotoxicity (cell death) in healthy cells and the fact that all the animals died in the animal trials, Graphene Oxide Nanotechnology was never approved for use on Humans! The two nucleic acids RNA + DNA team up to create proteins. The process of creating proteins using the genetic information in nucleic acids is so important to life that biologists call it "the central dogma" of molecular biology. The dogma, which describes the flow of genetic information in an organism. RNA in a basic way is the biomolecule that connects DNA and proteins. But RNA and DNA can do more than just encode "letter" sequences; they can also copy them. This works because the bases on one RNA or DNA string can stick to bases on another string, but only in a very specific way. Bases link up only with "complementary" partners: C to G and A to U in RNA (or A to T in the case of DNA). So, DNA serves as a template to transcribe an RNA molecule, which MIRRORS the DNA sequence — encoding a record of it. selective perturbation of individual genetic elements, as well as to advance synthetic biology, A type of RNA called messenger RNA (mRNA) uses this copying function to ferry genetic data from DNA to the ribosomes, the protein-producing components of the cell, according to the University of Massachusetts. Ribosomes "read" mRNA sequences to determine the order in which protein subunits (amino acids) should join a growing protein molecule. <https://www.livescience.com/what-is-RNA.html>
